ABSTRACT

Background: Should display the rationale and justification of the research and also aims of the study.

Aims: The objectivity of this study.

Methods: This section should clearly present study design, research procedures, sample size calculations, intervention, measurements, statistical techniques applied, and other steps done in the study.

Results: This section should present the findings that can answer the study purpose. Present the most important qualitative or quantitative outcomes directly answering the study aim.

Conclusion: State the direct interpretation or main takeaway derived from the results. Explain the broader practical, clinical, policy, or theoretical significance of the findings. Include a brief, single clause on major limitations or recommended future research if space permits.

Keywords: Authors should provide at least three keywords to enable online search. Authors can use MeSH on Demand to identify the Keyword similar with PubMed articles that might be relevant to your submitted text.

There is no specific subsection in the Abstract for Perspectives, Commentary, and Photo Essays, but authors may use following articles as future references in preparing those types of articles.
